DETAILED ACTION

Allowable Subject Matter

1. Claims 1-43 are allowed.
2. The following is an examiner's statement of reasons for allowance: The prior art fails to teach or fairly suggest the presently recited method and means, by which a thermal infrared radiation signal is processed to extract a revised portion thereof, which revised portion is formed from distinguishable components derived from either temporally different radiation signals from the same sample, or from spatially different radiation signals from the same sample.

Any comments considered necessary by applicant must be submitted no later than the payment of the issue fee and, to avoid processing delays, should preferably accompany the issue fee. Such submissions should be clearly labeled "Comments on Statement of Reasons for Allowance."

3. The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure. Weinberg et al ('917) disclose a method and apparatus for detecting thermal infrared radiation from a plurality of samples, and teaches continuous measurement of each sample. Thus, Weinberg et al teach the step and means for collecting radiation signals at different times from the same sample. Weinberg et al, however, fail to teach or fairly suggest the presently claimed processing of those signals by replacing a portion thereof with a revised signal formed from distinguishable components taken at different times. Similarly, McFarland et al ('813) disclose a method and apparatus for detecting thermal infrared radiation from a plurality of samples. McFarland et al further teach that the plurality of samples can be monitored continuously or periodically, and sequentially or simultaneously. McFarland et al further teach the provision of a known standard within the field of view of the infrared camera in order to enable direct comparison and calibration of the spatially or temporally separated signals. However, McFarland et al fail to teach or fairly suggest the presently claimed processing of those signals by replacing a portion thereof with a revised signal formed from distinguishable components taken at different times, or from different regions of the same sample at the same time.

The remaining prior art cited by applicant has been considered to the greatest extent feasible. Applicant has submitted more than 300 references for consideration as "pertinent." While the examiner has considered the extensive number of references as closely as possible, Applicant's failure to provide the documents in computer readable and searchable format, or to point out those portions of the disclosure deemed to be particularly material to the claims at issue, makes a complete review of the documents practically impossible.
